PASO HERALD

Established April, 1881. The El Paso Heraid includes also, by absorption and succession, The Dally News, The Telegraph, The Telegram, The Tribune.

The Graphic, The Sun, The Advertiser, The Independent,
The Journal, The Republican, The Bulletin.

MEMBER ASSOCIATED PRESS AND AMER. NEWSP. PUBLISHERS' ASSOC. Entered at the Postoffice in El Paso, Tex., as Second Class Matte

Dedicated to the service of the people, that no good cause shell lack a champion, and that evil shall not thrive unopposed.

The Daily Herald is issued six days a week and the Weekly Herald is published every Thursday, at El Paso, Texas; and the Sunday Mail Edition is also sent to Weekly Subscribers.

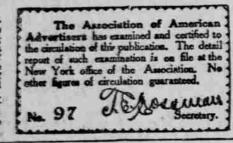

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Daily Herald, per month, 50c; per year, $7.00. Weekly Herald, per year, $1.00. The Daily Herald is delivered by carriers in El Paso, East El Paso, Fort Bliss and Towne, Texas, and Cludad Juarez, Mexico, at 60 cents a month.

A subscriber desiring the address on his paper changed will please state in his communication both the old and the new address.

Subscribers failing to get The Herald promptly should call at the office or ielephone No. 115 before 6:30 p. m. All complaints will receive prompt atten-

CIRCULATION. The Herald bases all advertising contracts on a guarante confirmer than twice the circulation of any other El any other El Pase, Arizona, New Mexico or West Texas pa-

HERALD TRAV-ELING AGENTS. Persons solicited to subscribe for The Herald should beware of impos-ters and should not pay money to anyone unless he can show that he is legally author-ized by the El Paso Herald.

dle of June.

dow overlooking a narrow street on the left bank of the Seine in which the hotel was situated. The roise and bustle of the crowd, the shouts of the pedlars reached her ears as from a far off world while she sat thinking of the many happy hours she and Gerard had spent here together until the day when the shadow first fell across her path.

and her husband had walked along the Boulevard des Capucines watching the passing automobiles to choose one for a ride through the Bols de Boulogne. They stopped several, but all of them as they drove through the Avenue des passed them as if they were standing still and even ald cab horses seemed to make fun of them. They drove all through the Bois, however, and on their l'Etoile and mounted to the top of the her of her early youth when been madly in love with him long be-fore she met her husband. After the death of her mother sne had spent some man, who had made a strong impression upon her. During their long walk brough the woods her love had grown, but it did not take long to discover he was merely experimenting with her, he exerted ovr her mind. When she realized his heartlessness and broke with him, she fell into a nervous fever, and when she got over it she returned to Berlin and heard nothing of him until she now unexpectedly met him again, oking the same as then, though his back they got out at Place de felt somebody staring at her. She

That day, a beautiful day in May, she

Peace, Blessed Peace

PINAL paragraphs of president Taft's 40,000 word message contain the declarawhich the real meaty part of the message occupies, it looks as if the president had given these matters the most careful and longest consideration. The pith of the message is what the president has to say about the interstate commerce law and the anti-trust law. He says that there has been no time to test the effect of the interstate commerce amendments made by the last congress. Three points that the president formerly recommended were not covered in the amended law, but, says the president in his message: "I do not press the consideration of any of these objects on congress at this session."

Only a very few amendments to the interstate commerce law are recommended, and none are likely to cause bitter contention. No change whatever is suggested in the anti-trust law. "Rather," says the president, "let us stop for awhile and witness the effect of the vigorous execution of the laws on the statute books."

In addition to enforcing existing laws, the president believes that the activities of government should be directed for the present to economy of administration, enlargement of opportunities for foreign trade, building up home industries, and strengthening the confidence of capital in domestic investments.

The whole message is a conservative, restrained pronouncement. In fact it is exceedingly dull, both in a literary sense and in a political sense. There are no preachments, nobody is called a liar or a scoundrel no phrases are coined for the use of future makers of quotation dictionaries, and the whole message is just about as sensational as the annual report of the street commissioner. Yet, after ail, a careful reading will disclose a number of significant recommendations, just the sort that might be expected to come from a man of president Taft's training

Of the new suggestions put forward, the most notable is that to extend the classified civil service to all postmasters, including first, second, third and fourth class. This would remove at one sweep the greatest number of political appointive government positions ever snatched away from hungry politicians at one time. It is altogether likely that congress will pay no attention whatever to this part of the message; the recommendation is so essentially conservative, rational, and right that it becomes radical, almost revolutionary, in the eyes at least of those who have had a hand in distributing the patronage.

The president strongly recommends the simplifying of judicial proceand suggests that the supreme court under special authority from congress make a thorough revision in the rules of procedure with a view to expediting the work of the courts. The president recommends also that the supreme court be relieved of much unnecessary appellate consideration, which the courts below might just as well dispose of. The president renews his recommendation that the issuance of injunctions be regulated by law, in order to prevent radical legislation proposed by some agitators and in order to avoid the dangers of "that cruel social instru-

The recommendation for an increase in the salaries of federal judges is accompanied by a comment which bears significantly upon the probable fate of the Arizona constitution when it goes before the president. Says president Taft, "Next to life tenure of judges, an adequate salary is the most material contribution to the maintenance of independence on the part of our judges." Expressing elsewhere his preference for life tenure, it does not seem as if the proposition to "recall" judges by popular vote at any time during their term is likely to appeal very strongly to the president.

The recommendation for national incorporation of interstate commercial and industrial organizations is renewed. Possibly next to the president's pronouncement upon the interstate commerce and anti-trust questions, his views on the tariff will attract the most attention among business men. He strongly recommends a permanent tariff commission to correspond with the strictly business organizations in foreign countries that have charge of tariff revision. He urges that only one schedule at a time be taken up for revision, and that only after careful investigation and report by the permanent tariff commission. The present tariff and the corporation tax are declared to be most successful income producers.

A leasing system for coal, oil, and gas lands is approved, also for water power sites. The president strongly urges legislation at the short session with a view to putting into practice some of the more important conservation plans that have been thoroughly thrashed over. The recommendation for specific conservation legislation is one of the very few pointed suggestions put forward for the work of the short session. The president approves the secretary of the interior's suggestion that land litigants take their appeals to the courts instead of having to rest their cases with the land office and the secretary.

Much space is devoted to foreign relations. Generally speaking, our relations with foreign countries are declared to be in every way satisfactory. The United States will direct China's monetary reform. The course of the United States in Central and South American matters is explained.

There is no reference to the Rodriguez incident or to the Mexican insurrection. The only references to Mexico relate to the centennial and the cordial reception by Mexico of American delegates, and to the prospective settlement of the El Paso boundary dispute. However, while there is no direct mention of the Rodriguez incident, the president makes a very strong recommendation for federal legislation to enable the national government to protect aliens in their political and treaty rights and safeguard their lives and property even though state governments may find local mobs uncontrolable and may be indisposed to protect foreigners and prosecute those who violate the treaty rights of foreigners.

The president recommends the establishing of a bureau of health and expressly denies that any spacial school of medicine would be favored through such an

Only twice does the president refer to "my predecessor," once in reference to certain investigations that president Roosevelt carried on as to coal land leases in British colonies, and once in connection with the payment to the Southern Pacific of the claim arising out of the successful fight against the encroachments of the Colorado river, when president Roosevelt personally solicited aid from the Southern Pacific and personally promised that he would do what he could to get the government to reimburse the railroad. This is a just and honorable debt, and it will be a national scandal if it is not quickly discharged.

In his message the president discloses himself as a most cautious writer. He has several times proved himself to be vigorous as a constructive statesman and as a pacificator. He would much rather act, than write about what he intends to do, and his careful and deliberate, if ponderous, message as chief executive ought to have the effect of quieting down a lot of the senseless agitation and smoothing the way for continued national progress along rational lines in a spirit of optimism amply justified by the facts of the situation. Without trying for effect, the president has demonstrated his fitness for the job at this period in the

UNCLE WALT'S Denatured Poem

OME unknown friend sat down and wrote to me a kind and pleasant note, His statements were mighty sweet; his penmanship was plain and neat until he tried to write his name, and then a fit attacked his frame. He must have suffered fearful pain to make a drawing so insane. Methinks I see him paw

SIGNATURES

the air, and bite the rungs out of his chair. I only hope that some kind soul was there to push him, with a pole, into the ice-chest, there to lie until the fierce attack passed by. How sad it is so many men climb up and ride upon a pen, and splatter ink, and bust their hames, when they attempt to sign their names! The note to which I have referred—could anything be more absurd? I've studied it with tears and grouns; sometimes I think the name is Jones, and then again I'd say it's Brown, with sundry letters upside down. Perhaps it's Smith; if may be Duff; I give it up-I've toiled enough. There ought to be some chloride cures for men with dizzy signatures; they make the angry passions rise, they bring hot water to the eyes, they waste the time of busy men, by their gymnastics with the pen.

Copyright, 1910, by George Matthews Adams.

Wash Mason

THE FLIGHT

The Herald's Daily Short Story

LIZABETH had been longing to get the air, I feel so dizzy. It will soon away from Paris and this afterpass." noon they were to leave. Since that day she had been afraid to Gerard had not been able to undermost him again. Every time they we stand why she felt so uneasy whenever they were outside the walls of the into a restaurant her eyes scanned all the people, looking for the man she notel, but when she had told him the reason the day before, he had first tried was afraid to meet They had spent some days at lovely to calm her, but finally he had given it up and promised her to leave and now Fontainbleau. Elizage I felt strangely warriors against humanity—the pesti-relieved there. She need not foar a lence of tuberculosis. Within the last meeting now she had left Paris behind two years by means of the Red Cross she was busy packing her trunks. She was thinking of the months she had spent in Paris, a city she had Every morning she breakfasted stamp, a fund of $250,000 has been raisquickly learned to love, nay, which she early and went for long walks through ed. These stamps have heretofore been and really loved since she visited it the the woods as far as Barbicau. On one first time with her father while of these walks a man came towards day packages. This year, in deference was still very young. Now she and them on the narrow path. It was he. Gerard had spent their honeymoon-She felt him stare straight in her face, as she had always dreamed of doing. and she turned pale as a ghost. Her legs trembled so that she could hardly and their intention had been to stay for at least another month until the mid-When he had passed she sat down on a bench. Gerard, who was Tired with the effort of packing, she busy studying a pocket map of the had sat down to rest near an open win-woods, had not noticed her confusion. From that day she felt instinctively hat the man was trying to bring her under his old influence and she asked Gerard to leave and though it puzzled him why she was so anxious to get away from the city, he knew she loved, fructified nine years earlier in the he had asked no questions. When they were first engaged she had hinted at her first love affair, but she had never felt able to tellGerard everything, but fell in the struggle with the Russians. yesterday when they came back to the Her work in the Crimea, which extendhotel and the walter handed her a card ed over a period of two years, attractand said a gentleman had been asking ed international attention, and for her and would return, she broke When they reached their room asked exorbitant prices, and at last they had to be satisfied with an old taxicab, but still they felt like princes she threw her arms around her husband's neck and confessed everything. her nervousness and the feeling that he Lamp." possessed a strange power over her, the public's affections that when she which she could not resist. Why had returned to England she was given Champs Elysees, though all other autos he followed her to this little hotel in $250,000 by a grateful government and the Latin quarter? What did he want from her? She thought of Gerard's loving tenderness, of his attempts to cheer her up, but she felt relieved only when he promised her they would leave are de triomphe to enjoy the view of at orce. If she could only get away before he returned. She would not listen to Gerard's suggestion that they should stay and that he would see the Suddenly, while they were standing there, looking towards Louvre, Elizaman alone, when he called. Now every-turned her head and saw a tall, dark thing was packed and in an hour the gentleman in a grey suit standing at cab would call for them. the door leading to the stairway. She On the way to the Northern railroad thought she saw a sarcastic srille about his lips. She had recognized him immediately and the memory came back to of Rue du Pont Neuf. There had evident had been a lips of the condition of Rue du Pont Neuf. There had evident had been acceptant. dently been some accident. A large motor bus was standing in the center of the crowd. Gerard left the cab to see if there was any way to pass by time with friends in a provincial town Elizabeth did not want him to leave her she was afraid they would miss their Gerard returned and said they train. would have to wait. A man had been run over by a bus and the wheels had crushed his chest. An ambulance came because it amused him to see the power stopped along side their cab. Four men carried the lifeless body. Elizabeth gave a cry of horror-she had recognized in the dead body the man from whom she was running away. Half an their compartment, she whispered to Gerard, who held her hand:

dark hair was now beginning to turn a "Do you think he was on his way little gray. A feeling of dizziness and see us? What could he have to tell me? fear overcame her and it was only by exerting all her strength that she could us go down, Gerard. I do not feel quite "But what is the matter, dear?"

Now I shall never know. With a feeling of intense relief she speeding homewards towards the north.

seize Gerard's arm and whisper:

Beatrice Fairfax ON THE SILENT

ed the guard, And, "Glu-glug, burble, burralaughed the baby. She was an enchanting baby and had held the attention of most of the pasengers during the journey. had poked a small pink finger into the eye of a fussy old gentleman in the next seat and he, after first childish voices ring? ooking deeply outraged, had ended by returning the courtesy and playfully oking her fat little neck,

She had beat a strenuove tattoo on as she is capable of on an over-fed the newspaper of the young man be- pug, hind her and he, after blushing furiously at the shameless young woman's advances, had smiled kindly on her. A comfortable looking woman who as though she might be the shoes or broken toys. nother of eight, beamed on her from

A sad-looking woman gazed at her orgingly, then turned toward the window and I could see that her eyes were blurred with tears.

The whole car belonged to the baby. She had laughed and crowed and gurgled her way into the heart of every man, woman and child in it, The young mother looked proud and cleased, as she had every right to be, The baby was sweet and wholesome, and it was hers, her very own, to cuddle and kiss and dream over

On Fifth avenue, a few days later, saw a well-dressed young woman step into a motor and in her arms she arried an elaborately dressed doll, "Must belong to her little girl," I "Not at all."

riend with whom I was walking, "It elongs to herself and you see dozens other women doing the same thing." Isn't it contemptible? It's bad nough to fuss and pet a dog, but the dog is at least alive. What are the women coming to?" The little girl who lives her dolls getting ready to love her real babies when they come along in their own good time, "I don't believe that the grown women who are senselessly following fashion by carrying dolls ever loved dolls as little girls. They were probably little cut and dried, heartless bita LAMAICA, all change cars!" shout- of humanity, who thought more of fine clothes than play. If you told a man of the gentle, kindly expression that crosses his face when he looks at a child, he probably would tell you it was perfect nousense and purely your imagination, Do you know the silent houses. where no little feet patter and

Sometimes you find the head of the silent house a hard-faced, bejeweled woman, who lavishes such affection

And sometimes you find the head of the silent house a sad-faced woman drawer and takes out little, worn-out

The little restless fet that wore the shoes and the eager hands that broke husband with cold, hard cash. the toys have drifted far away from the silent house

There is no tie on earth that so closely binds a household together as the weak grasp of a baby hand,

WHO? Who beat the bosses in New York? Who used the big stick on the stork? Who pinned the tariff to his fork? Please, mother, pass the pickles.

—Milwaukee Journal.

When he had said he would refrain? Who said he ne'er would run again? Well, look at Walter Wellman. -Houston Post. Who with enthusiasm warm

Who went up in an aeroplane

Once tried the spelling to reform? Then turned and fled before the storm? Oh, why is bacon so high? -Chicago Tribune.

Who stumped the country far and wide? Who sought to turn the angry tide? Who for his party bled and died? Oh, ain't it awful, Mabel? -Grand Rapids Press.

Who was it couldn't stay away Abroad until election day? Who had to rush back home and say "Delighted! You're a liar!"?

Conserving of Human Life Is Purpose of Red Cross Society

In War and in Peace It Carries on a World-Wide Work.

to rob war of its herrors and to ameare not confined to those dread times when war clouds hang over the nations of the earth, is brought home to every individual at this season of the year, for it is during the holidays that the organization begins its campaign for raising funds to fight the grimmest of fixed upon the face of letters and holito the wishes of the postoffice department, they are to be known as Christmas seals instead of Christmas stamps, there having been much confusion on the part of thoughtless people who believed that the Red Cross stamp took the place of the regular postage stamp.

Beginning of the Movement.

the work which the Red Cross assumes was started in Geneva, Switzerland, in 1863, but the idea may be said to have heart of Florence Nightingale who went to the Crimea to purse the wound-ed French and English soldiers who deeds of mercy each evening after a battle, when she sought out the helpless on the field, won for her the af-fectionate title of "The Lady With the

with this sum she founded a training

The Red Cross, as a concrete agency, however, owes its origin to Henri Du-nant, a philanthropic Swiss gentleman who witnessed the frightful suffering on the battlefield of Solferino, near Mantua, Italy, in 1859, when the dead and wounded among the French and Sardinian allies were 18,000 and among the Austrians 20,000. He saw how inad-home for nurses, which remained as a monument to her memory.

The first direct movement for the es-

HE Red Badge of Humanity might | equate were the medical forces of the well be used as the term to epiltwo armies to take care of their own injured, and upon his return to Geneva omize all that the insignia of the Red Cross, the American branch of he proposed to the Public Utility soclety, a philanthropic organization of meets in Washington today, that city, to start a movement for the stands for among the nations of the earth. Less than half a century old, establishment of a volunteer force to supplement the work of the corps of this great organization has done more surgeons maintained by every International Conference Held.

liorate the suffering of those who are general invitation to the nations the victims of great convulsions of naof Europe to take part in an internature and of catastrophes over which tional conference was sent out and 14 man has no control, than any other sin-gle body of men and women in the hiscountries were represented in the coun-ell which was held in Geneva in 1863. response to Geneva's invitation 36 As Miss Mabel Boardman, the greatdelegates from 14 nations of Europe (all except Turkey, Greece, Portugal est dynamic force in the American Red Cross so aptly put it in a recent ad-dress, the one cardinal principle of the and the Papal States) assembled in the Swiss capital and in conference recom-Red Cross is conservation-conservation mended that each government extend of human life. Miss Boardman, a memits sanction, authority and protection to ber of the central committee, holds no sanitary commissions and their relief office in the organization, but to her corps; that in time of war the privilege even the distinguished head of the of neutrality be extended to ambulan-American branch, president William H. Taft, looks for the management of the ces, military hospitals, officials and attaches of the medical services, regudetails of the work in times of peace lars and volunteers, to nurses and to and she will be the commanding figu at the meeting in the capital this week. the inhabitants in the theater of war, That the activities of the Red Cross wounded in their houses; and that the universal insignia and flag of persons, officials and volunteers, who assist in the care of the wounded in war and of ambulances and hospitals in all armies be a white flag or band with a red cross. The form of the in-signia was adopted as a tribute to Switzerland, the parent country of the idea, the Swiss flag being a 'white cross on a red background.

While the United States had nothing to do with this first conference, its influence was of supreme importance the following year when two delegates were sent to tell the international body of the success of the United States sanitary commission which had been organized at the opening of the Civil war and which had performed wonderful service with the Union army. testimony from the United States, setting forth the practicability of a movement to the proposed Red Cross, was a tablishment of an organization to do splendid inspiration to the founders of the new organization

First American Society. The first American Red Cross society was founded a year after the close of the Civil war and was known as the American Association for the Relief of Miseries of Battlefields, and it was about the same time that Clara Barton first came into the public eve. Miss Barton was a government clerk in Washington in 1854. With the beginning of hostilities between the northern and southern states, she entered the hospital service and after the war organized, at her own expense, a search for missing soldiers. Subsequently she followed the German army throughout the Franco-Prussian war and at its close was decorated with the Gold Cross of Raden and the Iron Cross of Germany. It was through her efforts that the American Red Cross of today was organized in 1881 and she remained its active president until 1904. The International Red Cross acts under the only universal conservation treaty in existence. One after another all the nations of the earth have signed the revised agreement of 1906 and its

(Continued on next page.)

Jorothy Dix Asks Can a Woman

YOUNG woman writes to me that she is possessed of unushal attractions of mind and along clanging its bell furiously, and body, and yet she is the victim of an unhappy love affair. Other med adher, but not the one whose admiration she craves. Other men ask her to marry them, but not the one whose wife she would like to be. He hour later, when they were sitting in alone remains indifferent to her charms and she wants to know if there is any way by which she can win him. Thackeray has declared that any woback, can marry any man she chooses, and to a degree this statement seems laid her head on her husband's shoul-der and cried while the train was determined women leading cowed and determined women leading cowed and subjugated men to the altar, and a fairly large percent of husbands, if asked suddenly to tell why they married the particular woman they did. would be constrained to reply that they didn't marry at all, they were married. Woman's Trade Secret. How the women do this is their own trade secret, that they refuse to give away. Probably the successful female hunters were women who were clevet enough to make studies of their victims' habits and tastes, and were thus enabled to lay traps into which the unsuspecting men stumbled. Undeniably there are men-and we could name their names if we were cattish enough to do so-who were fed into matrimony. There are others who were bluffed into it, and others who were wept into it. Sometimes a woman runs after a man until she finally catches him. Sometimes she piques a man into asking her to marry him by throwing a hated rival in his face and arousing the dog in the manger spirit who often steals away to open a in him. Sometimes a woman works on a man's sympathles until he marries her for pity, and, again, there are plenty of women who simply purchase a

There are many ways of marrying a man, but to make a man love you is an entirely different matter, doubt if there is anything that a woman can really do to win a man's love. Love is a gift of the gods, bestowed or withheld, fantastically, whimsically, without regard to rhyme or reason. Love Not Explainable.

No man on earth knows why he loves; why some particular woman attracts him and another leaves him indifferent; why his pulses thrill at the very rustle of one woman's skirts and he would not turn his head to look at another, though she sat by his side all day; why the cold, commonplace word of one woman is treasured in his memory, while he forgets the passionate devotion of another. It is a question of nature, of personal magnetism, of that strange instinct of selection that we may recognize it.

A woman's worth, her intelligence, her looks even have very little to do with a man's falling in love with her, and so it is in vain that she adorns herself for him or shows off her wit before him, or stands around in a stained glass attitude. upon her head, and if she has no mag- all upon it.

netism for him he will pass her by though she were the embodiment of all the virtues. Nor can any man fall in love to order. If he could there would be very many more suitable and happy marriages in the world because many a wife that he knows he should marry. but he simply cannot bring himself to follow his head instead of his heart in the matter How One Man Expressed It

In speaking of such a case said not long ago to me: "I have never worked as hard at anything in my life as I have at trying to fall in love with Sally. She is everything in the world that comes up to my ideal of a perfect woman-good looking, gracious, well bred, intelligent, industrious, domestic, entertaining and charming. I enloy her society but to save my life I can't get up one throw of sentiment over her. e"Is it not ghastly to think how much the sport of fate we are in such matters? I cannot love this good woman that I so admire, and yet the chances are that some day I shall go crazy over some weak, vain little fool, and erable ever after. But I am helpless to love, as I shall be powerless to keep keep from loving when I meet the One Woman." It is one of the most pathetic things in life that we cannot win love, nor recall it when we have lost it, any more than we could a wilding bird. that has escaped from our hand.

This is what makes so heart rendingly futile the efforts of women to hold men who have tired of them. The g'rl whose sweetheart has grown indifferent to her, and who neglects her. tries to draw him back to her by her tears and prayers, by her abasement of herself before him, by her frantic clinging to him. The wife whose husband has ceased to care for her, has become cold and callous to her. seeks by a thousand little coquetries, by trying to make herself look young again, by attempting to surround him with more home comforts to turn him once more into the lover.

Vain hope. The fire is out on the altar and you cannot kindle into flame the dead ashes. When the illusive something that attracted a man to woman is gone from her for him it is like a lost perfume, or the effervescence of a bottle of champagne. cannot resist it. Probably-nay doubtless-in most cases the man regrets the lost attraction just as much and as bitterly as the woman does. It is as From Las Cruces (N. M.) Citizen. great a tragedy to the man to cease | El Paso is soon to have another wireto love the woman he has chosen as it we do not understand, however much is to her to cease to be loved, but he cannot compel his affection, nor force dimself to thrill because it is his duty to thrill at his wife's kiss.

Therefore, with sorrew I say to my correspondent, that there is no known system by which she can break the bank of love. It is a game that has him the mysterious attraction that is not count. It is the greatest gamble the real inspiration of all love he will on earth, which is the reason that men seek her out with all of her faults and women never tire of staking their

Abe Martin

Uncle Niles Turner will soon be as old as th' jokes in a woman's magazine. It's hard t' understand what some autoists er drivin' at.

Years Ago To-

Dr J H. Sloane of Santa Fe has come to El Paso for his health. D. W. Fall, a well known Denver assayer, is in town today. George Fitzgerald leaves Monday on a two weeks' business trip to New .

Rev. Richard de Palma, formerly of this city and now stationed at Albuquerque, is in town for a few days. H. C. Myles has gone down the road to ship more cattle, after shipping north eight carloads. Duval West, United States assistant district attorney, arrived on yester-day's G. H. train from San Antonio to look after extradition matters.

Governor Thornton and Pat Garrett came down today on the Santa Fe. His excellency will be in town only a short time, attending to private matters.

George W. Emerson was badly shocked and hurt this morning at 9:20 on Mesa avenue, when he had a collision with the buggy of Dr. Justice. A gang of pickpockets are working on San Antonio street. They relieved G. G. H. Below of his gold watch this The street commissioner has done a good job in cleaning out the sand hill in front of the Mills building on the The recent confirmations at St. Clement's were: James Davidson, Mrs.

Madeline Davidson, Mrs. McNeave, Mrs. Nellie McCatthy, Mrs. Nellie Irene Mc-Carthy, Mrs. Nancy Lee Southgate, Mrs. Jennie Landon, Miss Kate Crosby, Miss Eudora Winifred Smith, Miss Mary Louise Cole Richard Wales Jones, Joseph Dandridge Terry, Col. Valentine Sublet Shelby.

LETTERS To the signature of the writer, but the name will not be published where such a request is made).

(All communications must bear the

A DIFFERENT VIEW. Anthony, N. M. Dec. 4. Editor El Paso Herald:

Having lived six years in Mexico, among the middle class and despised peons. I know conditions in that unsappy land pretty well. All appearances point to the conclusion that the anti-American riots were inspired by the Diaz government, and not by the revolutionists. That party could have nothing to gain by such tactics, for its leaders know that the majority of workingmen from the States who are in Mexico are in sympathy with them, and they also wish to avoid giving the United States government cause for in-

Nine-tenths of the intelligent middle class Mexicans are ready for revolt, whenever they think there is any chance of success. It is only the "stupidity of the low, ignorant" class that upholds such a government. Viaz knows this and purposely keeps the masses ground down in ignorance and poverty, till they have not enough spirit to throw off the yoke of tyranny that is crushing them, The only people in Mexico who, as class, have any real grudge against the Americans, are the employers of They despise the gringoes for labor. paying better wages than they have been paying their peons. That causes discontent among Mexican employers' slaves and many leave their former masters and go to work on the ranches and in the mines of the foreigners. Those are the people who love to hear a crowd of drunken peons shouting, Muerte a los gringoes

Anyone who has lived any length of time in Mexico (among the people, I mean, not in some first class hotel, or as a guest of some government official) knows that when a crowd of peons get drunk they can easily be led to give any "grite"designing persons might desire them to. They must have some excitement, and if nothing else offers, often fall to carving up one arother. It is to the interest of the Diaz regime to prejudice the American people against the popular uprising in favor of the rights of man, and if pos-sible to get the United States government to help hunt down the victims of Diaz's tyranny. May Madero prove to You be a second Hidalgo.

G. A. Halbrooks.

less telegraph station, which is grafffying. It hasnt been but a short time since the Pass City had a tower, but the company became afflicted with cold feetis and drifted out of the burg whose people couldn't be inveigled into buying something that hadn't been worth and their faith to deliver the If she has for no rules, under which precedents do goods. El Paspans are true blue when It comes to helping enterprises that will aid in the upbuilding of their city, but they believe in the Missourian creed and must "be shown '